RMHA Mission Principles

- Our clients' interests always come first.
- Our most cherished assets are our client relationships and our reputation.
- We would rather be regarded as "best" rather than "large." We are most proud of the professional quality of our work, which reflects an unwavering dedication to maintaining standards of unsurpassed excellence.
- We are committed to serving our clients with a combination of consummate experience, continually renewed and expanded expertise, and powerful creativity.
- We will treat the confidential information of any party that is entrusted to us as though it were our own sensitive information.
- While working vigorously for the interests of our clients, we will never conduct our business in other than a manner characterized by uncompromising integrity.

Since 1969, Robert M. Haas Associates has counseled public and private companies in merger and acquisition transactions and in business valuation engagements, as well as mentored early stage ventures regarding the commercialization and/or funding of new technology.

In connection with our acquisitions practice (principally on behalf of the selling party), the firm is retained by both domestic and foreign clients, and frequently is called upon by the investment banking community to provide assistance to their clients. In addition, many assignments arise from referrals from former clients as well as from accounting and law firms which have observed our work first-hand.

RMHA's acquisition advisory services include business valuation and marketing strategy; preparation of a detailed memorandum covering all facets of the subject business; selection of optimum transaction partners; the leading role in negotiations; coordination of due diligence activities; the development of the necessary documentation (including assistance in the preparation of disclosure schedules), and assistance in securing the funds required to complete a transaction.

RMHA also is retained by acquisitive clients which request the firm's assistance regarding a particular acquisition opportunity, commencing with the initial contact with the principals. The firm typically assumes a primary role, at the client's behest, in the information gathering, negotiation and consummation stages of the transaction.

The sizes of transactions in which RMHA has participated have ranged from $3,000,000 to in excess of $100,000,000, with the majority of transactions falling between $5 million to $75 million.

The firm's valuation practice concerns such matters as the establishment or administration of an ESOP or a shareholder agreement, a gift of stock, a stock redemption, a dissolution, a recapitalization, a financing, or the sale of an interest in a business in part or in whole. The evaluation process culminates in the preparation of a detailed analysis of the subject firm, including a thorough treatment of its past, present and prospective financial performance and condition, its products and/or services, its markets, its competitive standing, its human resources, and its facilities, as well as relevant macro considerations. Suitable valuation methodologies are applied in order to arrive at a value which is soundly determined and well-documented.

Our firm's longevity and breadth of experience in scores of industries attest to the consistently superior counsel which we continue to furnish to clients. Upon request, RMHA is pleased to provide references to enable an interested party to obtain a first-hand account of how the firm effectively and ethically will satisfy a client's objectives.

Since 1969, RMHA's mission has remained the same: To surpass the expectations of its client.

PHASE I

(A) PRESENTATION DOCUMENT PREPARATION

Utilizing a project checklist furnished by RMHA, data is compiled to enable RMHA to draft the presentation document(s) to be provided to potential transaction partners. In addition to a thorough review of the financial and operating history of the business, a SWOT analysis (i.e., strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats) of the client's products and/or services, technological profile if pertinent, market(s) and competitive environment, account base and distribution, sales and marketing, management and organization, facilities, regulatory (e.g., environmental, workplace safety, etc.) considerations, and intangible attributes is performed to ensure that the business is described in the optimal and most accurate manner.

(B) STRATEGY DEVELOPMENT

RMHA evaluates what types of transactions best fulfill the financial, strategic, and other objectives of the client. Numerous factors are considered, including for example:

- The likely fair market value parameters of the business depending upon alternative acquirer profiles.
- The preferable deal structure (e.g., stock vs. assets, type of consideration, tax and financial implications, retained liabilities [if any], etc.)
- The ongoing roles of management and employees subsequent to a transaction, and related matters such as non-compete agreements, employment agreements, etc.

(C) SOLICITATION MATERIAL PREPARATION

RMHA prepares a blind profile, which condenses the contents of the presentation document, and/or utilizes a survey technique, to ascertain the preliminary interest of prospective transaction partners approved by the client.

(D) ROSTER DEVELOPMENT

RMHA compiles a roster of possible transaction partners for the client's review and approval including:

- Strategic parties from a vertical or horizontal standpoint, including foreign companies.
- Other parties within or related to the industry, including foreign companies.
- Parties seeking new venture investment opportunities.

PHASE II – CONTACTING AND SCREENING PROSPECTIVE TRANSACTION PARTNERS

RMHA assumes complete responsibility for exchanges with prospective transaction partners including:

- Qualifying prospects after confirming a sufficient preliminary interest (based upon a review of the candidate's transaction history, financial wherewithal, current strategic criteria, etc.).
- Communicating the process schedule and milestones to transaction partners.
- Submitting confidentiality agreements to prospective transaction partners for their execution.
- Furnishing presentation documents to interested transaction partners and arranging other necessary information-sharing.
- Eliciting preliminary expressions of value and structure from prospective transaction partners.
- Arranging for selected candidates to participate in subsequent information exchanges, including site visits.

PHASE III – NEGOTIATIONS

RMHA assists in analyzing alternative proposals and manages the negotiations of terms, developing solutions to controversial issues that may arise, and assists in the preparation of pertinent documentation.

PHASE IV – CLOSING AND POST-CLOSING MATTERS

RMHA coordinates the closing process including due diligence and documentation, and serves as liaison with legal, accounting and, other (e.g., pension, environmental, information technology) advisors. RMHA monitors and advises the client regarding post-closing matters as required.

There are many misconceptions about business appraisal. It is not merely a matter of applying supposedly universally accepted industry or market “rules of thumb” (e.g., the infamous “one times revenue” or the equally absurd one-size-fits-all “five times EBITDA”) to the entity’s reported financial results. It is not as simple as inputting five years of historical or projected financial data into a computer and running some packaged software that calculates “the number” since too often the “GIGO” or “garbage in garbage out” syndrome applies. There is no such thing as the “back of the napkin” when it comes to sound, useful business appraisal.

Business appraisal work product must be scrupulously independent, thorough, well-documented, internally consistent, logical, credible, and understandable, and it must be client-specific.

The best work product should deliver far more to a client than merely a number. A good appraisal should provide takeaways relating to a business’s operations, personnel, financial, market, competitive, and other matters that pinpoint measures which will enhance the business and its value.

Standards of value can vary from fair market value to fair value to investment value, etc., and “value” accordingly can be materially different depending upon which standard is to govern in a given engagement.

Credible business appraisal begins with a thorough investigation of the business to be valued. Accordingly, RMHA makes copious inquiries into the business’s activities as conducted prior to the valuation date, and as contemplated to be conducted in the future; the business’s historical financial performance; its financial condition; the nature and adequacy of facilities and other tangible or intangible assets; management’s expectations for the business’s future financial performance and their rationale for same; the business’s current and contemplated market circumstances and competitive posture; the prevailing and contemplated market dynamics (e.g., technology developments that will transform the business’s environment; the impending emergence of off-shore markets, or lower cost competitors); the business’s management and organizational expertise and depth; the entity’s ownership and governance documentation; and any other information, or pending or contemplated developments, which management reasonably believes might have a material impact upon the business.

Depending upon the nature of the interest being appraised, the process encompasses a careful assessment of non-recurring or extraordinary, under-funded, excessive, or discretionary income statement items. Consideration is also given to the adequacy and fair market value of both intangible and tangible assets, as well as liabilities, presented on the balance sheet as compared to the stated book values; any assets or liabilities that may not be presented on the balance sheet, and the treatment of any non-operating assets and liabilities.

Based upon a comprehensive understanding of the business, RMHA then applies various market, income, and asset methodologies in order to develop its conclusion as to value. The market approach estimates value based upon an analysis of sale transactions involving comparable enterprises either in whole or in part. The income approach estimates value based upon an analysis of an enterprise’s reasonably estimated future stream of economic benefits, either using a single-period earnings base such as net cash flow, or a multiple period forecast. The asset or cost approach, for example, might estimate value based upon an analysis of the cost to replace the enterprise’s assets and other resources.

Inasmuch as RMHA’s appraisal reports are routinely submitted to such parties as the Internal Revenue Service, and given our fundamental commitment to developing highly defensible and well-documented conclusions about the values of the businesses that we appraise, our clientele are assured that RMHA can be relied upon to deliver superior appraisal work product.

Robert M. Haas, Jr. joined Robert M. Haas Associates in 1983 following a number of years in private law practice with the firm of Cummings & Lockwood in its Stamford, Connecticut offices. Mr. Haas's areas of concentration included both corporate and litigation practice with his principal emphasis being acquisitions and other varieties of corporate finance transactions. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Cornell University where he was also inducted into the Senior Honor Society of Quill and Dagger, his Juris Doctor degree with honors from Boston University, and his Master of Laws in Taxation degree from Temple University. Mr. Haas is admitted to practice law in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia as well as in various federal courts. Mr. Haas is an Accredited Senior Appraiser designated in business valuation by the American Society of Appraisers. In addition to his acquisition advisory and business appraisal activities on behalf of RMHA's clientele, Mr. Haas has made presentations to a variety of organizations, including bar associations, business clubs, graduate programs, and professional societies, on valuation and strategic transaction planning and execution. Mr. Haas is a recipient of the George D. Sinclair, FASA Professionalism Award in "recognition for outstanding leadership and service to the ... appraisal profession and the public".

Emeritus Principal

Robert M. Haas, Sr. founded Robert M. Haas Associates in 1969, prior to which time he served in various senior line management positions with both public and private companies, including Group Vice President for Cosmodyne Corp., an American Exchange firm active in aerospace and defense systems and cryogenic and industrial systems and services, and Vice President and General Manager; Vice President of Marketing, Engineering and Inspection and International Operations as well as Chief of the Executive Committee for Ryan Industries, Inc., a private firm in which he was a principal shareholder and which manufactured cryogenic gas storage vessels. Mr. Haas began his career in industry with Lincoln Electric Company in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Haas was a commissioned officer in the United States Air Force, having received his Bachelor of Science degree from the United States Military Academy at West Point and having earned a Master of Science degree in Industrial Engineering from Ohio State University. Mr. Haas is a Registered Professional Engineer in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.
